The "fit and proper" criteria (or "fit and proper test") make reference to requirements for evaluating managers, directors and shareholders. Particularly, the ability to fulfill their duties ("fitness") as well as their integrity and suitability ("propriety") are examined. This concept is a standard in corporate governance of financial institutions.

Most financial supervision organisms include these requirements in their regulatory frameworks to ensure that institutions have a prudent and solid management. Senior management, directors and shareholders who hold influence over the entity's operations must meet the "fit and proper" criteria. Fitness requirements take into consideration formal qualifications, previous experience and career.

On the other hand, integrity and suitability analyze aspects such as criminal records, financial position, civil actions against third parties, sanctions applied by regulators of other similar industries, questionable business practices and rejection or expulsion from professional associations.
